ENDNOTES

1 Some commentators take "the Spirit of holiness" to refer to Christ's own holy being, i.e., His own human spirit.

2 It is easy to see how some mss. copyists could delete sexual immorality by mistake: in the Greek the word porneia looks so much like the next word poneria (evil).

3 Verse 31 contains five negative words beginning with "alpha-privative" (cf. a-theist, "no God"), similar in word structure to our English words beginning with "un-". NU omits unforgiving (as - pondous) which looks much like unloving (astorgous).

4 A. P. Gibbs, Preach and Teach the Word, p. 12/4.

5 Lewis S. Chafer, Systematic theology, III:376.

6 NU text omits "and on all."

7 Literally "sinned" (aorist, not perfect).

8 The same is true in Hebrew and Greek.

9 Arthur T. Pierson, Shall We Continue in Sin? p. 23.

10 Paul Van Gorder, in Our Daily Bread.

11 Cranfield points out (I: 222) that attempts to find a very subtle difference are not convincing. Augustine was probably correct in ascribing the change to rhetorical variety.

12 Or the experience of "Abraham our (fore)father according to the flesh."

13 Daily Notes of the Scripture Union, (further documentation unavailable).

14 While some manuscripts omit "not," the resultant meaning is much the same.

15 C. H. Mackintosh, The Mackintosh Treasury: Miscellaneous Writings by C. H. Mackintosh, p. 66.

16 The KJV rendering "atonement" was correct in 1611, when it meant "at-one-ment" or reconciliation.

26 George Cutting, "The Old Nature and the New Birth" (booklet), p. 33.

27 The words "who do not walk according to the flesh, but according to the Spirit" are widely thought to be mis- copied from v. 4. However, they do occur in most mss., and may simply give further description of those in Christ.

28 The NKJV translators took pneuma to refer to the Holy Spirit, hence the capital "S". The original mss. were in all "capitals" (uncials), so it is a matter of interpretation. We take it as referring to the believer's (human) spirit.

29 See note 28. Here the alternative meaning of Spirit is not the human spirit, but an attitude that is the opposite of slavery.

30 In Hebrew, the word for glory is derived from the verb to be heavy, hence the Jews would see a play on words, even though veiled by the Greek.

31 This was John Calvin's life verse.

32 C. H. Mackintosh (further documentation unavailable).

33 A very literal rendering is "we super-conquer" (hupernikomen).

34 These words were used in astrology, for example.

53 Quoted by Charles Swindoll in Growing Strong in the Seasons of Life, pp. 69, 70.

54 The usual Hebrew verbs for "kill" and "slay" are qātal and hārag The specific verb "murder" (rāhats) is used in the Ten Commandments, and the Greek translation is equally clear.

55 NU text omits this commandment here.

56 Some ancient mss. (NU) read "judgment seat of God" rather than "of Christ" (TR and M texts). But we know that Christ will be the Judge, since the Father has committed all judgment to Him (John 5:22).

59 Lenski, Romans, p. 895.

60 The feminine form of diakonos ("servant," "deacon") would probably have been used if a specific office for women had been meant.

[61] (16:5) NU text reads Asia here (but Corinth, from which Paul was probably writing, was in Achaia).

12 Some differentiate between "entering" the kingdom and "inheriting" the kingdom. They teach that a believer could conceivably not conquer a major sin in his life and yet be saved. He would "enter" the kingdom but have little or no inheritance (reward) in it. However, this passage deals with the unrighteous, i.e., the unregenerate.

26 The "himself" has been supplied; it is not in the Greek.

27 Barnes, 1 C, p. 147.

28 Charles C. Ryrie, The Study Bible, New King James Version, p. 1771.

29 The NU text adds the explanatory words here, "though not being myself under the law."

31 Charles C. Ryrie, The Grace of God, p. 83.

32 NU omits "as," but it seems important to Paul's argument — he didn't actually become weak.

33 Much of the problem stems from the KJV translation "castaway." The word a-dokimos simply means "not-approved." As an athletic term, it translates very well by our English "disqualified."

34 Godet, First Corinthians, pp. 59, 60.

35 Kelly, First Corinthians, p. 166.

36 NU omits the repetition.

37 It is clear from verses 4 and 5 that in situations involving prayer and prophesying, a woman should be covered whenever it is proper for a man to be uncovered. Women who have difficulty knowing what to do and when to do it should observe the man's example and do the opposite.

38 Vine, Expository Dictionary, under Glory, , p. 154.

39 F. B. Hole, "The Administration of the Mystery" (booklet), p. 5.

40 The Greek word is haireseis, but here it does not have the later meaning "heresies." See note on Titus 3:10.

41 Greek usually uses opheilō for moral necessity. Here Paul uses the regular word for logical necessity, dei.

42 Godet, First Corinthians, p. 163.

43 Glōssa ("tongue") is the ordinary Greek word for "language." Similarly, formal English still occasionally says, e.g., "the French tongue."

44 Much of what some people call "prophecy" today is either merely a re-wording of Bible texts or actual error that does not come true. Both are often in a poor imitation of King James English, as though God could not communicate in today's language!

45 The Greek word en can be translated in,with or by with equal accuracy (context permitting), but we consider "in" the most "literal" because it is related to Greek en.

[46](12:29, 30) These questions start with me in Greek, suggesting a paraphrase such as, "Surely, all don't speak in tongues?" — and so forth.

47 The word is nepios (cf. Heb. 5:13).

48 Kelly, First Corinthians, p. 229.

49 However, there is no indication in the original that the subject of "may interpret" is different from that of "speaks."

50 The literal rendering is "understanding of me." The "of me" is in the genitive and is the object of the action suggested by the noun. The same form can be a subjective genitive. The context determines which is best.

[51] (14:19) Charles Hodge, First Corinthians, p. 292.

52 The same Greek word andres can mean "husbands," "males" or "men-(folks)."

53 Erdman, First Corinthians, p. 148.

54 NU text omits "the Lord."

55 The majority of Greek mss. have an exhortation here: "Let us bear . . . ."

[1](1:8, 9) John Stott, Only One Way: The Message of Galatians, pp. 27, 28.

2 The critical text reads Cephas (Aramaic form of Peter).

3 E. F. Kevan, The Keswick Week 1955, p. 29.

4 Circumcision is a minor surgical operation performed on the male. When God ordained it for Abraham and his descendants, He intended it as a sign of His covenant with them, namely, that He would be their God and they would be His people (Gen. 17:1-11). It was not only a physical mark, but also a spiritual symbol. Abraham was circumcised as a sign that he had trusted in God (Rom. 4:11). The Jews soon forgot the spiritual meaning of circumcision, and carried it out simply as a ceremony. Thus the rite became valueless as far as God was concerned.

In the NT, circumcision is no longer commanded since God is now dealing in grace with Gentiles and Jews alike. In the early days of the church, a group of Jewish believers insisted that circumcision was necessary for salvation. Hence this party was known as "the circumcision" (Gal. 2:12).

5 A fairly full account of this meeting at Jerusalem is given in Acts 15. It should be studied carefully.

6 See note 2.

7 The punctuation, including quotation marks, is editorial. Some interpreters end the quotation here and view vv. 15-21 as Paul's later explanation of what he said to Peter.

8 W. M. Clow, The Cross in the Christian Experience, p. 114.

9 While Greek has separate singular and plural forms for who, an answer in the plural could not be ruled out here.

10 The most ancient manuscripts were all in "capitals." (Lower case letters evolved later.) Hence, while capitalization is editorial, the capital H for He is well taken in context.

11 J. Cynddylan Jones, Studies in the Gospel According to St. John, p. 113.

12 Though there seems to be a contradiction between the argument here and the fact that Christ is later spoken of as the Mediator of the New Covenant (Heb. 9:15), the word mediator is used in two different senses in these two places. Moses served as a mediator simply by receiving the law from God and delivering it to the people of Israel. He was the go-between, or the people's representative. Christ is Mediator of the New Covenant in a far higher sense. Before God could righteously dispense the blessings of this covenant, the Lord Jesus had to die. Just as death alone puts a person's last will and testament into force, so the New Covenant had to be sealed with His blood. He had to give Himself a ransom for all (1 Tim. 2:6). Christ not only insures the blessings of the covenant for His people, but also maintains His covenant people in a world that is antagonistic toward them. This He does as High Priest and Advocate, and this is also a part of His mediatorial work.

13 The Greek word paidagōgos (whence the English pedagogy) literally means a "child-leader." Such a person, usually a slave, was to see that the child got to and from school. Sometimes he taught as well.

14 The critical text reads simply an heir through God.

15 Norman B. Harrison, His Side Versus Our Side, p. 71.

16 Several theories have been advanced as to Paul's "infirmity." Some eye disease, among several that are common in the Middle East, is a likely candidate. Malaria, migraine, epilepsy, and other problems have also been suggested.

22 C. I. Scofield, In Many Pulpits with Dr. C. 1. Scofield, p. 234.

23 The critical text (NU) omits adultery. The word fornication (porneia) is often translated sexual immorality, which would include adultery. However, it is unlikely Paul would fail to specifically mention this rampant sin of marital infidelity in a catalogue of the flesh's vices.

24 The critical text omits murders (phonoi). Since this word looks so much like the previous word ("envy"), it would be easy to delete it in copying.

25 See note on 1 Corinthians 6:9.

[26](5:22, 23) Samuel Chadwick, quoted by James A. Stewart, Pastures of Tender Grass, p. 253.

27 English usage demands that the aorist estaurōsan be translated as a present perfect, but the aorist indicative stresses the deed, not lasting results.

6 Both the oldest and the vast majority of existing mss. read hearts (lit. kardias, the singular), not understanding (dianoias). The marginal reading is thus undoubtedly correct.

13 First Corinthians 13:12 and 1 John 3:2 are sometimes used to prove that we will be omniscient in heaven. However, the first reference deals only with recognition of one another in heaven and the second with moral and physical likeness to Christ.

19 The Greek word for stewardship or dispensation, especially in the large (uncial) letters of the earliest mss., could easily be mistaken for the similar-looking word for fellowship (cf. OIKONOMIA and KOINONIA). The margin is correct; the traditional reading has very weak support.

26 "Granville Sharp's rule" states that (in Greek) two nouns of office, title, or quality joined by kai (and), with only the first having the definite article, refer to the same person. A good example of this construction is "our God and Savior Jesus Christ" in 2 Peter 1:1, where the liberal RSV translators felt constrained by grammar to be stronger for the deity of Christ than even the King James. (The grammatical rule was not clearly defined till the late 1700's.) In the plural, as here, the rule does not always apply, though the construction at least closely associates the two nouns (cf. "Scribes and Pharisees," etc.).

4 By derivation the word translated "sincere" (eilikrinēs) means "unmixed," or possibly "sun-proof." If the latter, it has the same idea as English "sincere" (lit. "without wax"). An honest sculptor would keep chipping away to remove a flaw in a white marble statue. An "insincere" one would fill the gouge up with wax. But, in the sun, a statue with a wax filling would soon expose the sculptor's cover-up.

5 William Kelly, Elements of Prophecy, p. 253.

6 "Lord" (Kurios) is the critical (NU) reading. The traditional reading Christos (TR) of the KJ and NKJV is not (as sometimes) weakly supported; here it is the majority reading. Some scholars understand the "Day of Christ" as a reference to the final period of persecution, which can only begin when the man of sin has been revealed. Some of the Thessalonians wrongly thought that this period had already begun. By connecting this period with a post-Rapture event, Paul effectively refutes this notion.

7 Some theologians, such as J. Dwight Pentecost, translate apostasia as "departure," and refer it to the Rapture itself. If this is valid it is an air-tight verse for the pretribulational Rapture.

8 "Sin" is the TR and majority reading; "lawlessness" is the critical reading.

9 The Greek preposition (here a prefix) anti has both the meaning "against" and "in place of." Both meanings fit the Antichrist.

10 The Greek has a neuter article and participle in v. 6 and a masculine article and participle in v. 7.

11 Rogers, Future, p. 65.

12 The Holy Spirit is spoken of in the neuter for strictly grammatical reasons (the word pneuma is neuter). The masculine is used to stress His personality.

13 Both are valid translations of the genitive noun Christou (lit. "of Christ"). The KJV translates as an objective genitive (the "of-word" receiving the action suggested by the noun it modifies). The NKJV subjective genitive has Christ as the One showing the patience.

14 The Greek words are "not at all ergazomenous (working), but periergazomenous (working around or meddling around)." (Note the root "erg" – work.)

[5] (1:20) The Greek word blasphēmeō (defame, blaspheme) is used for both God and man. Our English derivative is used almost exclusively for God and sacred things.

[6] (2:9) John Chrysostom, quoted by Alfred Plummer in The Pastoral Epistles, p. 101.

[7] (2:15) J. P. Lilley, "The Pastoral Epistles," p. 94.

[8] (3:2) Christians who hold this view stress the elder's loyalty to the one woman implied in the Greek construction: "a one-woman-kind-of-man."

[9] (3:3) Since deacons must not be money-lovers (3:8), it seems unlikely that Paul would have omitted this quality for the even more responsible elders.

[10] (3:11) Probably it had not yet become a church office for women at this early date. See note in Ryrie Study Bible, NKJV, p. 1850.

[11] (3:16) J. N. Darby, "Notes of a Lecture on Titus 2:11-14," The Collected Writings of J. N. Darby, VII:333.

[12] (3:16) The sacred names of God, Christ, the Spirit, etc., were abbreviated in ancient mss. The Greek abbreviation for God looks exactly like the word for "who" plus a short horizontal stroke that differentiates a theta from an omicron and another stroke above the word to show it is an abbreviation. The mss. read variously "God" (TR and majority text), "who" (NU) and "which." We accept the traditional reading of the majority of mss., followed by the KJV and NKJV.

13 Mary Baker Eddy, Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, pp. 64, 65.

14 The critical (NU) text reads "we labor and strive."

15 King, Leader, p. 79.

16 Both the oldest and the majority of mss. lack "good and" before "acceptable." The shorter reading is no doubt original.

17 The omission of the believing man from this verse in the NU text is probably accidental. It seems highly unlikely that Paul would write only of those widows being cared for by believing women.

18 R. C. H. Lenski, The Interpretation of St. Paul's Epistles to the Thessalonians, to Timothy, to Titus and to Philemon, p. 700.

19 Ibid, pp. 701, 702.

20 The NU text omits this sentence.

21 Edward Herbert Bates, Spiritual Thoughts from the Scriptures of Truth, p.160.

22 Albert Barnes, Notes on the New Testament: Thessalonians, Timothy, Titus, Philemon, p. 199.

23 J. C. Ryle, Practical Religion, p. 215.

24 From news reports about the late Howard Hughes.

25 H. C. G. Moule, Studies in II Timothy, p. 91.

26 The Latin word scientia simply means "knowledge." The English derivative "science" (1611 text) now has a much narrower meaning, hence NKJV's change.
